

Dr. Barbara Kennedy first worked with children, families and schools in special education in Australia and has experienced natural disasters first-hand. Later as a psychologist, she also worked with individuals and consulted to organisations alongside her academic career. In universities, in Australia and Aotearoa New Zealand, she has taught a wide range of psychology courses, conducted and supervised research and trained beginning psychologists. She has now returned to private practice and specialises in coaching psychology and supervision.